Proposed Project Title: Via Ad Infinitum - The Tribe
Project Advisor: Victor Mendoza

Proposed Project Abstract (approximately 150 words):

Via Ad Infinitum - The Tribe seeks to understand and integrate the Tribal perception and use of music with modern theoretical elements in an effort to bring improvised music closer to the average individual. VAI includes an hour-long performance of continuous music featuring Tribal rhythms and melodies from Australia, Africa, Latin America, Europe and Asia. This is not just a typical world music project, as it makes use of all aspects of performing arts, while exploring music's role in tribal communities against the backdrop of issues and people in our modern society and their relationship with music. These explorations will be portrayed mainly through the use of specific tribal rhythms and melodies in conjunction with various aspects of contemporary music.

Part II: Agreement

The author will supply Berklee College of Music with a full electronic copy of his/her Culminating Experience. All components comprising the finished product will be included, such as the final reflection paper, a recorded performance or presentation, scores, etc. All materials should be submitted according to the "Graduate Programs Digital Asset Format Standards for Archival Submission Guidelines."

The author hereby grants Berklee College of Music the right to retain one or more copies of this Culminating Experience project in any format, whether electronic or hardcopy, for nonprofit educational use and archival purposes.

Copyright ownership remains with the author and this agreement does not prohibit the author in any way from using all or part of this Culminating Experience project in future works. The author warrants that the Culminating Experience project does not – and when published will not – violate any copyright or other right of others. The author hereby will indemnify and hold harmless Berklee College of Music and its employees and agents for any damages it or they may suffer if this warranty is breached.
